In the second part of the course, Germanic literary texts will be analyzed, from a linguistic, philological and literary point of view. Students will gain therefore an understanding of the diachronic functioning of the modern languages and a knowledge of the medieval origins -regarding history, culture, literature- of european societies.
Course contents	Part I (a) The course aims at the acquisition of a basic knowledge of Germanic linguistics and medieval Germanic history and culture. As for linguistics, aspects of the phonetics of the Germanic languages will be studied; the student will be grounded in the historical and comparative study of these languages. As for morphology, the verb system and the classes of the strong verbs will be studied. As for the historical and cultural part, the various areas of the Germanic world will be introduced (Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, Old German, Scandinavian).

Part II (b "Paganism and Christianity in the medieval Germanic texts" ).The course will deal with the pagan elements and the relationship between paganism and Christianity in medieval Germanic texts written in Christian times. Passages from "Historia Langobardorum" (Paul the Deacon) will be read, subsequently Gothic (Bible of Wulfila), Old English ("Beowulf", charms), Old High German (Merseburger Zaubersprueche and other charms) and Old Norse texts ("Prophecy of the Seeress", Snorra Edda) will be read, translated and analyzed using a philological approach.

Teaching methods

Lectures in which, in interaction with the students, topics will be dealt with critically and medieval texts in the Germanic languages, using a philological approach, will be read, translated and commented.
