Prerequisites	This course is intended for MA students who have gained no fewer than 6 ECTS in History of Early Modern Philosophy. To fulfill such requirements is necessary in order to sit the exam.
Learning outcomes	This course is an introduction to the most important themes and the most influential tendencies of thought in the Enlightenment, through the study of a selection of texts and of specific secondary literature.
Course contents	Montesquieu, the "English model" and the governments' typology. Montesquieu's Esprit des Lois (1748) draws the first picture of the rising "science of society". It is a seminal text for liberalism and constitutionalism, which will become the paradigm for political theories from the Enlightenment to the French Revolution. It has been read under different lights: a moderate reading, focusing on the "English model", is counterbalanced by those who recover the very specific research about classical republics in order to draw reform and utopian

	programs. This course aims at a critical reading of the main concepts in the work, starting from the classification of political forms set on the opposition despotism vs. freedom which Montesquieu opposes to the universalistic models proposed by the tradition of juridical contractualism, in order to investigate the complexity of the actual state of European nations in the 18th Century.
