Obiettivi formativi	The course is designed to combine rigour academic analysis with a policy relevant study of current issues. On successful completion of the course, the students will be able to: (1) understand the basic factors of international conflict and cooperation; (2) select and analyze the main issues in contemporary patterns of conflict and conflict management; (3) retrieve data on international phenomena; and, (4) approach the position and interests of key international subjects.
Programma e contenuti	The course aims at presenting the features and trends that have come to characterize the contemporary international system; to examine if and how these features are changing the patterns of conflict and conflict management in international relations; and, to assess whether they trigger regional and/or global security dilemmas.

	First of all, the course will focus on some fundamental issues of current dynamics and discuss their theoretical and policy implications. To this regard, it will pay attention to the issue of great powers' identity and role; the issue of system polarity and the strategic consequences of unipolarism; the issue of the international effects of good governance and institutional fragility at the state level; the issue of the political consequences of competition for natural resources in a globalized world. Second, the course will present the main contemporary patterns of conflict management, by focusing both on states and on non-state actors as security providers. To this regard, it will specially focus on the changing nature of warfare and on the nexus between hunger and international conflict.
Metodi didattici	Lectures and seminars. Lectures aims at presenting key concepts and issues and offer basic knowledge to relate the theoretical controversies to real world phenomena. Seminars aims at debating key issues and puzzles in contemporary international relations and to emphasize their policy implications.
