

ETHICS AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Enrollment year	2016/2017
Academic year	2017/2018
Regulations	DM270
Academic discipline	SPS/01 (POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY)
Department	DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL AND SOCIAL SCIENCES
Course	WORLD POLITICS AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS
Curriculum	PERCORSO COMUNE
Year of study	2°
Period	1st semester (02/10/2017 - 16/12/2017)
ECTS	6
Lesson hours	40 lesson hours
Language	English
Activity type	WRITTEN TEST
Teacher	CARTER IAN FRANK (titolare) - 3 ECTS MOELLENDORF DARREL - 3 ECTS
Prerequisites	The course assumes only a basic acquaintance with the classic questions of political philosophy, together with an awareness of the complexity of the dilemmas arising in international relations. Above all, it presupposes a willingness and ability to question one's own ethical beliefs and to subject them to rigorous scrutiny. Students with no previous experience of political philosophy should consult an introductory text such as Jonathan Wolff, An Introduction to Political Philosophy (Oxford University Press), Will Kymlicka, Contemporary Political Philosophy. An Introduction (Oxford University Press) chs 1-4, or Colin Bird, An Introduction to Political Philosophy (Cambridge University Press). More specific preparatory reading can include some or all of the following:

P. Pettit, "Consequentialism" and N.A. Davis, "Contemporary Deontology", in The Blackwell Companion to Ethics;
J. Waldron, "Rights" and C. Brown, "International Affairs", in The Blackwell Companion to Political Philosophy;
M. Black, "Immigration" and C.A.J. Coady, "War and Terrorism", in The Blackwell Companion to Applied Ethics.

Learning outcomes

The course aims to provide students with:

- knowledge of the main dilemmas and arguments that have featured in contemporary ethical debates around global justice, human rights, territorial rights, migration rights, war, terrorism and humanitarian intervention;
- understanding of the philosophical theories behind those dilemmas and arguments;
- an improved ability to make clear and informed ethical assessments of the political and legal scenarios and decisions studied in other, more empirically oriented courses in world politics and international relations;
- an improved ability to engage in debates with efficacy and argumentative rigor.

Course contents

This is a course in applied philosophy: we shall be investigating philosophical problems that arise in the specific context of international relations. In particular, we shall be investigating problems of an ethical nature, problems that involve deciding what, in a moral sense, is the right thing to do.

In discussing these problems, we shall take for granted certain facts about the international world: that states exist, lay claim to territories, and exercise coercive power; that states protect, but also violate, human rights; that conflicts, including armed conflicts, arise between states, and between groups within and across states. We shall be trying to explain, not these facts themselves, but our moral reactions to them, and the moral duties and claims that we think states, groups, and individuals have with respect to one another in the various contexts that these facts create. Such moral duties and claims might or might not turn out to coincide with the dictates of international law.

Many of the moral dilemmas to be discussed in this course can be understood as conflicts between different kinds of moral right. We shall therefore begin by discussing the concept of a right and, more generally, the contrast between deontological and consequentialist forms of moral reasoning. We shall then move on to discuss several interrelated topics:

1. Human rights and global justice.
2. Justice and freedom of movement: the rights of immigrants.
3. Justice and climate change.
4. Territorial rights and the right of secession.
5. The ethics of war and terrorism.

In the academic year 2017-18, the course will include a special module held by a visiting professor: Darrel Moellendorf, of the University of Frankfurt. Prof. Moellendorf is a specialist in global justice and climate change.

Teaching methods	The course is divided more or less equally into lectures and seminars. The seminars consist in discussions and applications of set texts. Students are expected to engage actively in debates, both formally and informally, and to write an essay at the end of the course.
Reccomended or required readings	A reading list is supplied during the course. Readings discussed in class include the following: Peter Singer, "Famine, Affluence, and Morality", Philosophy and Public Affairs, 1 (1972), pp. 229-43. Thomas Pogge, "How Should Human Rights be Conceived?", in T. Pogge, World Poverty and Human Rights (Cambridge: Polity, 2008). Anna Stilz, "Why Do States Have Territorial Rights?", International Theory, 1 (2009), pp. 185-213. Christopher H. Wellman, "A Defense of Secession and Political Self-Determination", Philosophy and Public Affairs, 24 (1995), pp. 142-71. Arash Abizadeh, "Democratic Theory and Border Coercion. No Right to Unilaterally Control Your Own Borders", Political Theory, 36 (2008), pp. 37-65. Michael Walzer, Just and Unjust Wars (New York: Basic Books, 1977). Jeff McMahan, "The Ethics of Killing in War", Ethics, 114 (2004), Sections I – III, pp. 693-702; Sections VI – IX, pp. 718-33. Igor Primoratz, "What is Terrorism?", Journal of Applied Philosophy, 7 (1990), pp. 129-38.
Assessment methods	The final mark depends on (1) participation in class; (2) an assessed essay; (3) an oral exam. Students' participation in class will be assessed on the basis of evidence of reading, criticisms or applications of the author's arguments, the ability and willingness to interact effectively in discussions, and the rigour with which arguments are presented and defended. Essays will be assessed in terms of their clarity, structure, and argumentative rigor, in terms of their sensitivity to the relevant ethical and philosophical issues, and, ultimately, in terms of the efficacy with which they answer the relevant research question. Performance in the subsequent oral exam will be assessed on the basis of students' ability to clarify and/or defend the arguments presented in their essay, including in light of any relevant wider issues that arose during the course.
Further information	The final mark depends on (1) participation in class; (2) an assessed essay; (3) an oral exam. Students' participation in class will be assessed on the basis of evidence of reading, criticisms or applications of the author's arguments,

the ability and willingness to interact effectively in discussions, and the rigour with which arguments are presented and defended.

Essays will be assessed in terms of their clarity, structure, and argumentative rigor, in terms of their sensitivity to the relevant ethical and philosophical issues, and, ultimately, in terms of the efficacy with which they answer the relevant research question.

Performance in the subsequent oral exam will be assessed on the basis of students' ability to clarify and/or defend the arguments presented in their essay, including in light of any relevant wider issues that arose during the course.
