canonically central writer, J.W. Goethe and Bert Brecht, respectively, focusing on close readings of their lyrical poems and songs. The first part of the course ("Weimar I – Between carpe diem and Quiet Grandeur") is dedicated to Goethe's literary evolution from his rococo beginnings to the dense symbolism of his late poems. The second part ("Weimar II: Between Cabaret and Revolution") will deal with the equally important but quite different literary world of the Weimar Republic using Bert Brecht's songs and poems as focal points. Both parts of the course will explore the principal literary movements of the periods under investigation, such as Anacreonticism, "storm and stress", and Winckelmannian neo-classicism in the first part; expressionism, naturalism, and New Objectivity in the second part. In addition to close reading, historical contextualization and translation special emphasis will be put on analyzing the relationship between poetry and music. Each part of the course will end with an outlook on later periods and movements and an investigation of the impact the two writers had on them, i.e. Goethe's influence on romanticism and Brecht's continuing centrality for both German literature in exile between 1933 and 1945 (Exilliteratur) and the two Germanies after the war.

Teaching methods

Lessons will consist primarily of frontal lectures, mainly in German. Space will also be given to discussion and a more seminary-style approach of close reading and translation. The lectures will be accompanied by slides and other audiovisual materials. A series of excursions are dedicated to establishing a metalinguistic vocabulary and critical toolkit to facilitate close reading and discussion of the texts. The course will also provide historical background information and an introduction to genre theory.
